Cal Poly Receives $300,000 U.S. Department of Justice Grant for Gender-Based Violence Prevention

Cal Poly has been awarded a $300,000 grant from the U.S. Department of Justice to bolster the university's gender-based violence support services. The university is one of 53 universities nationwide to receive the Campus Program grant through the federal justice department's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW), which will provide funding over three years. Christine Hackman, assistant professor in the Kinesiology and Public Health Department, and Christina Kaviani, director of the Safer and Men and Masculinity programs, led Cal Poly's efforts to secure the multi-year grant. The funds will be used to enhance gender-based violence prevention and response efforts on campus, among other priorities, Kaviani said. The goal of the Campus Program grant is to create systemic, sustainable culture change at the university level. "This grant is an incredible opportunity for Cal Poly to be a U.S. leader in reducing sexual assault and intimate partner violence on college campuses," Kaviani said. "We plan to do this by offering more prevention education with a coordinated team of talented individuals in the San Luis Obispo community." Programming will be implemented with oversight from a "Core 7" group of campus partners, including members from Safer, the University Police Department, the Office of Equal Opportunity (Title IX), Dean of Students, and off-campus partners from RISE and the San Luis Obispo Police Department.
