The award winners for Distinguished Scholarship, Outstanding Staff, Outstanding Faculty Advisory, and Learn by Doing will be recognized, and then President Armstrong will give his State of the University address. Learn more and watch the event at <https://www.calpoly.edu/fall-conference>.

Fall Work Plan Outlines Return to Work Protocols

As the academic year gets underway next week, Human Resources wants to make sure campus community members are aware of the Fall Work Plan — Return to Work Protocols for COVID-19 at <https://afd.calpoly.edu/hr/fall-work-plan>. The plan offers guidance for different workplace scenarios as well as trainings and simple steps that can help keep the community safe. Human Resources encourages all campus community members to familiarize themselves with this plan. The academic year will start with most staff being asked to continue to telework. Any change to current on-campus staffing should be coordinated through the Emergency Operations Center. If it is deemed necessary that an employee return to campus, their manager must first complete the Workplace Readiness Assessment Form and follow the process that is laid out in the plan. Anyone with questions should contact HR at humanresources@calpoly.edu or call Employee Support Services at ext. 6-2236.

In Memoriam

William “Carl” Wallace, a dedicated staff member who worked tirelessly for over 30 years at increasing diversity and inclusion, died Aug. 11 at the age of 83. Wallace leaves behind a huge footprint on the legacy of the African American academic and cultural community at Cal Poly and, indeed, all of San Luis Obispo. As the director of the university’s Equal Opportunity Program (EOP) and later as the dean of students, Wallace was instrumental in the successful admissions and matriculations of thousands of students from ethnically diverse backgrounds and cultures. Wallace also assisted in the chartering process for the first Black fraternity in the 1970s.

Tina Bailey, professor emeritus and former chair of the Chemistry and Biochemistry Department, died July 22 at the age of 78. She was an incredible teacher and leader in education and a wonderfully loving human being. Bailey was clearly a pioneer, one of only a few women faculty members in science when she began teaching at Cal Poly in the 1970s. Bailey served as chair of the Academic Senate Curriculum Committee and finished her career with eight years as department chair of the Chemistry and Biochemistry Department. She received Cal Poly’s Distinguished Teaching Award and was once the campus nominee for the CSU Outstanding Faculty Award. At the national level, Bailey was recognized for her development of the studio classroom model, which combines lecture and lab to form an innovative and more effective learning environment. She also co-authored several editions of a nationally published organic chemistry textbook with her husband, Phil Bailey. In addition to raising four adopted children, Tina and Phil welcomed dozens of Cal Poly students into their home, offering them a place to live, assisting with tuition and fees, and simply providing love and moral support.

Gary Dwyer was born in Denver, Colorado, in 1943 and died Aug. 9 in San Luis Obispo. He graduated from Syracuse University and SUNY with a double degree in fine arts and landscape architecture, and later earned an MFA in sculpture from the University of Denver. Dwyer believed like Pericles that “what you leave behind is not what is engraved in stone monuments, but what is woven into the lives of others.” At Cal Poly, where he taught landscape architecture for 35 years, he became known as an inspiring, unconventional and beloved teacher and mentor. During the same period, he created numerous works in sculpture and landscape architecture in the U.S. and Europe. His wife, Odile, daughters Heather and Chelsea, stepdaughter Celia, five grandchildren, and hundreds of former students and colleagues will carry on his spirit. A celebration of his life will be held sometime down the road when the world is a little safer.
