FOR THE GREATER GOOD

Elizabeth Esparza had just finished her first year in the Master of Public Policy program at Cal Poly when she was surprised with the George and Janice Clucas Scholarship at a Political Science Department awards banquet last spring. Although Esparza’s bachelor’s degree from Sonoma State University was in English literature, she has always been passionate about community food systems, with particular interests in food waste, food redistribution and education.

She served two terms with FoodCorps, which is a division of AmeriCorps that works to connect kids to healthy food. This past summer, she interned with the Los Angeles County Food Redistribution Initiative in the Public Health Department while also working remotely for the National Farm to School Network.

She was excited about the opportunity to study public policy at Cal Poly, where she could focus specifically on food policy. However, just before completing her undergraduate degree, she was diagnosed with Lyme disease. The progressing symptoms and the residual effects from the treatments took a toll on her physically, emotionally and financially.

Esparza says the scholarship couldn’t have come at a better time. “It really helps relieve some of the strain,” she said. “I was able to put that toward my school costs, so I could focus on taking care of my health-related expenses.”

Esparza is exactly the kind of student George and Janice Clucas had in mind when they established the scholarship in 2006. They wanted their annual $1,200 scholarship to go to a student who exhibits high academic potential and an interest in pursuing a career in public policy.

“They were both so dedicated to education and very politically active,” said their son, Richard Clucas (History, ’78). “It definitely makes sense that they would set up this particular scholarship.”

Esparza is grateful for the support. With help from the scholarship, she plans to finish her master’s degree this spring. After graduation she hopes to find a position in which she can work with communities to find ways to successfully redistribute wasted food.

“Lyme is a pretty expensive disease to diagnose and treat,” she said. “This scholarship will definitely help me be able to continue meeting my health and education goals.”

SUPPORTING FUTURE EDUCATORS

Omer and Claudia King established the Kristin King Morana Scholarship to honor their daughter, who graduated with a degree in history from Cal Poly in 1980.

Brian Yañez Gounod received the $1,200 award this past year. The Kings specified that the scholarship should go to history students who are interested in teaching at the middle or high school level in the future.

Gounod’s passion for teaching is evident. He volunteers as a teacher in Morro Bay and Santa Maria and spends his summers working at a summer sports camp for kids. He says he was lucky enough to have great history teachers in high school, and he wants to provide the same experience for his future students.

The scholarship will help him cover the cost of traveling from San Luis Obispo to the local schools where he volunteers.

“It means a lot to be recognized,” he said. “So many history majors are doing great work, so I felt honored to receive this scholarship.”

Gounod is also minoring in Spanish and Latin American studies. He’s the treasurer of Cal Poly’s chapter of the Phi Alpha Theta National History Honor Society and the director of outreach for MEXA, which is a student-run organization dedicated to promoting higher education among Chicano teenagers and giving back to the community. His goal as a future history teacher is to introduce more diverse perspectives in the history curriculum taught in high schools.

He plans to get his teaching credential after graduation, so he can start teaching full time while also working toward a master’s degree. He says he appreciates that the Kings specifically wanted to help future teachers.

“Education work doesn’t always get recognized, but this scholarship makes me feel like I’m on the right path,” Gounod said. “It’s certainly a great opportunity. For that I’m thankful.”

BROADENING HORIZONS

Alan Nguyen came to Cal Poly as a biology major, but something didn’t feel right. After enjoying a couple of packaging classes, he decided to transfer into the Graphic Communication Department. “I’m just so happy to be in this major,” he said. “I sign up for every opportunity I can.”

He was on Cal Poly’s teams for the Technical Association of the Graphic Arts and the Phoenix Challenge and served as the social media coordinator for the university’s More than a Motto campaign. The one opportunity he hadn’t experienced yet was a work-based internship.

“As a first-generation college student, my family doesn’t always understand,” Nguyen said.

However, employees at Catalyst Paper definitely understand the importance of an internship. Each year, the paper company arranges for a graphic communication student who is concentrating in management to intern with one of its clients. The company also provides the selected student with a $6,000 scholarship, which helps to pay for transportation, housing and any other incidentals that may come with relocating for a summer internship.

This year Nguyen was chosen for the honor, and he was given the opportunity to intern with Colorado-based Publications Printers Corp., the official printer of the Denver Broncos.

“Receiving this scholarship really meant a lot to me. This type of opportunity doesn’t come frequently.”
— Alan Nguyen

The scholarship is named for Doc Stapleton, a Catalyst Paper employee who died in 1996. The year after his death, the company held a golf tournament to raise funds for Cal Poly’s Graphic Communication Department. The fundraiser was so successful, the company decided to have another one, and in 2018 the 22nd annual Doc Stapleton Memorial Golf Tournament was held.

“Doc loved printing,” said Jim Wright, senior sales director at Catalyst Paper and the organizer of the tournament. “Our hope is that the internship broadens students’ horizons about this industry. We also want students to get their hands dirty.”

Nguyen says the internship will help him graduate with the knowledge and skills he needs.

“I will be able to get right to work with printing, prepress, marketing or client relationships,” he said. “I don’t take anything for granted. I will make the most of this opportunity.”

If you are interested in setting up a scholarship for a Cal Poly student, please contact:

Jacquelyn Hayes
Director of Advancement
805-756-7052
jnhayes@calpoly.edu

Graphic communication student Alan Nguyen enjoys hands-on work experience thanks to a summer internship supported by a scholarship from Catalyst Paper.