Faculty Luncheon: AI Policy and Practice Discussion (May 6)

Join colleagues for a thoughtfully designed faculty luncheon focused on the evolving role of artificial intelligence in teaching, research, and academic practice. Facilitated by Dr. Ava Thomas Wright, this interactive session creates space for meaningful dialogue around both the opportunities and concerns AI presents within higher education.

Participants will engage in open conversation about emerging questions related to academic integrity, course design, assessment, authorship, and the responsible use of AI in the classroom. The discussion is intentionally balanced, creating room to explore innovative teaching practices alongside thoughtful skepticism, questions, and areas of uncertainty. Faculty will have the opportunity to share experiences, raise concerns, and consider how AI aligns with disciplinary expectations and institutional values.

Designed to be collegial and engaging, this session offers a supportive environment for reflection, dialogue, and shared learning. Whether you are actively integrating AI into your work or approaching it with caution, this conversation will provide valuable insight and community.

Lunch will be provided.
